Transcript:

...& the Jacobites exclaiming ev[er]y where against it, frights the Commonalty so, that their inclinations are very much altered of late & speak openly ag[ain]st the Union. When we were coming to the vote it was whispered to us that there was a rable at the doors & were pressing to be in & had knock'd down some of the Guards, this was told my L[or]d Marishall too, who tho[ugh] he opposes yet acted very handsomly in this, for he proposed to adjourn the Debate it being then late, I seconded him & it was done accordingly & the Com[missione]r adjourned the parl[iament] till yesterday. Had the Mob got in, it was too probable that the consequence that the consequence wou'd have been tragicall.

When we came out of the house, we found the Parl[iament] Closs full of mob, the Com[missione]r & severals w[i]t[h] him went to the Abbay & the D[uke] of Hamilton went to the D[uke] of Athole's w[hi]ch is in the Land Market. The wholle mob & rable followed him, he was in his Chair w[i]t[h] the Glasses down & was huzza'd all the way. He stay'd not long at the D[uke] of Athole's but went down the Streets to his Lodgings in the Abbay accompanied in the same manner. My L[or]d Montrose chanced to be coming up the Street in his Coach, the mob commanded the Coach to stop, but the Coachman drove on, some of the mob call'd to Montrose if he was against the union God bless him, but if for it God damn him; however he went on. When the D[uke] of Hamilton & the mob came to the Abbay Gate the Guards stopt them from coming in to the Court, so they went back to the Town in ane uproar & went streight to Sir Pat[rick] Johnston's house who you know had been Provost last year & one of our Treaters.

They assaulted his house, broke his Windows & did what they could to beat open his door giving him names & calling out that they would massacre him for being a betrayer & seller of his Country.
